The NYC Housing Partnership is getting some love from Gov. Andrew Cuomo. Aries Dela Cruz, the governor's Manhattan representative, presented a letter of congratulations on April 15 to Housing Partnership President Dan Martin, recognizing the nonprofit's move into a new headquarters and ongoing work to create affordable housing in the area.

"The Housing Partnership record of success in facilitating over 60,000 units of new and preserved affordable housing is a testament to the tireless work of its leadership and staff," Cuomo said in the letter.

Dear Friends:

It's a pleasure to send greetings to everyone gathered for the ribbon-cutting of the NYC Housing Partnership's new offices.

I'm proud to join in congratulating the Housing Partnership on this milestone in its extraordinary history of service to our City and State. For over 35 years, the Housing Partnership has been an invaluable partner in helping to provide affordable housing to generations of New Yorkers, facilitating partnerships between the City, State, and private sectors to improve the lives of our residents and strengthen the fabric of our communities. The Housing Partnership's record of success in facilitating over 60,000 units of new and preserved affordable housing is a testament to the tireless work of its leadership and staff, and the opening of its new, larger offices reflects both the agency's ongoing growth and its promising future.

On behalf of all New Yorkers, I extend my congratulations once again to all affiliated with the NYC Housing Partnership and my deep thanks for your ongoing commitment to helping provide affordable housing to our residents and ensure a brighter future for our communities. You have our very best wishes for continued success and growth as you remain a vital resource to our City and State.

Sincerely,
